This week we asked a select group of experts for their opinion:

I. On the recent fluctuations in the gold and silver markets.

Adrian Day, President, Adrian Day Asset Management, There is an awful lot of potential buying in the wings, waiting for a pullback. So although we will see corrections, they are unlikely to be deep or long-lasting, because of this. So the investor, who is underinvested, should buy on any dips—early December's qualifies—and not wait too long. The better exploration stocks are also very inexpensive.

II. For their stock picks.

Michael S. (Mickey) Fulp, Recent coverage on Oremex ORM.V (more)

Adrian Day, President, Adrian Day Asset Management, Exploration companies, with cash and drill-ready projects could be very exciting over the next six to 12 months. Virginia, with six drill projects in Quebec (VGQ, 5.25) or Kiska, with large property with several targets in Alaska (KSK, 1.04) are good examples.

III. On important occurrences this month.

Michael S. (Mickey) Fulp, The supply and demand destruction in the uranium market (more)

Adrian Day, President, Adrian Day Asset Management, The fact that buying come into gold on just a $100 pullback, and started to move back. This is very strong, particularly given the dollar's rally.
